SUMMARY:

House Bill 5261 would amend the Public Health Code to allow an opioid to be administered during surgery to a patient who has executed a nonopioid directive form.

A nonopioid directive allows patients to notify health professionals that they do not want to be administered opioids—often because they are most at risk of misusing opioids, including those with a history of an opioid disorder.¹ The form was introduced by 2018 PA 554.²

However, the code allows a prescriber with a controlled substance license or a nurse acting on the order of the prescriber to administer an opioid to a patient with a nonopioid directive form if, in the prescriber's professional opinion, the administration is medically necessary.

The bill would add another exception under which an opioid could be administered: if the opioid is for intraoperative use—which means occurring or performed during the course of a surgical operation.
